INN FREQUENTED BY NAPOLEON STILL IS CONDUCTING BUSINESS

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.)
Augsburg, Bavaria — The most famous inn in Germany, "The Three Kings" at Augsburg, has been celebrating an anniversary of its founding 400 years ago.
Napoleon spent sometime in Augsburg with his staff and the old guest-book of the inn held the signatures of Josephine Beauharnais and Marie Louise. Next to them were inscribed the names of Metternich and Talleyrand, and of various princes and ambassadors enroute to the Congress of Vienna.
Other noted guests included Wellington and Sir Walter Scott.

THE CONSTITUTION AND TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES.

Obstacles have arisen in the effort of the federal government to meet the demand for a financial system which will eliminate the tax exempt security issued by states, municipalities or the government itself. The rights of the states have been summoned as the one reason why congress cannot infringe on one article of the constitution by amending it with another, when that right is one of the foundation stones of the constitution itself. In order to escape the surtaxes, wealth has been invested in several billion dollars of these tax exempt securities and cannot now be reached in levying taxes to support the government. The Philadelphia Ledger calls attention to this and happily exclaims that the postponement of the vote on the proposed resolution for the constitutional amendment asked for by President Harding and supported by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, until after the holidays, presumes the defeat of the measure at this congress. The Ledger says:

There are two strong arguments against it. The first one is that it disregards the rights of the states. The United States is a federation of sovereign states. The one of the inalienable rights of sovereignty is the control over the financial affairs of the sovereign.

No power outside of Pennsylvania, (this applies also to any other state), should have control over the borrowing power of the Commonwealth. If congress should be permitted to tax Pennsylvania bonds the rate of interest on those bonds would have to be adjusted to the federal tax. And if congress should be allowed to tax bonds of any city of Philadelphia the city would be hampered whenever it sought to borrow money for public improvements.

The second argument is that a tax on a public security defeats itself. The revenue raised by the tax has to be met by another tax to meet the increased rate of interest that must be paid on a taxed security. And there is no net gain to the community. It means, so far as revenue is concerned, merely taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another.

It has been held, however, by many of the leading lawyers that the federal government already had the right to collect taxes on securities of the states under the 10th amendment to the constitution adopted in 1812 and operative since Feb. 23, 1913 and providing that congress might "lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever sources derived, without apportionment among the several states."

Charles Evans Hughes, then governor of New York, asked the legislature not to ratify the amendment since it gave power to the federal government to invade the state and levy taxes on its securities, "was an unwarranted invasion of state rights," and made the "performance of the functions of local government a matter of federal grace."

No attempt was made then, nor has there been any since to levy a tax on state securities or to invade the state as was predicted. In one case before the supreme court of the United States, in 1920, it was not decided directly but intimated that congress did not have the power to tax the income of state bonds. In that case, Evans vs. Gore, the federal power to tax incomes from state bonds was only a collateral question. The supreme court has never had occasion to decide the issue as set forth plainly in the 10th amendment. And now congress as represented by the southern states declares that an amendment to carry out the provisions of the 10th amendment is an invasion of state rights. Congress seems in a mood to defeat the effort to tax some 12 or 18 billion dollars worth of exempt securities, which we feel is an act of justice and that tax exempt securities should not be used as an evasion of public duty.

France may have large cities but the present difficulties seem to be truly Rubial.

EUROPE DOESN'T WANT US THERE.
Let it be understood that one of the reasons why we cannot enter so deeply and finally into the matter of settlement of reparations is that we took no lot of war, asked for nothing and yet agreed at Paris to the terms of the Versailles treaty fixing the indemnity for France and other nations and the division of territory which resulted. President Harding and the government have not undoubtedly settled the questions at issue in a short time could it be possible to enforce the settlement after being made, by full acceptance of the terms imposed. But it is a European matter, to be settled by Europe and until the United States is asked to arbitrate, we cannot enter the party without reasonable and just cause for objection. Europe wants money, not advice.

We did not participate in the spoils of war, that has been left to others. It is time that these nations acted in some degree of good faith with the rest of the world and settled the very vital things that are constantly disturbing all life and happiness everywhere. A conference without the settlement of reparations would be as futile as that at Genoa and later the one at Geneva—resulting in nothing more than an emphasized spirit of antagonism and deeper international breaches.

Prognosticator says McAdoo will be the next president but Pa. Wilson may have something to say about that.

Another Coal Strike Possible

By FREDERICK J. HASKIN.
Washington.—Members of the commission headed by John Hays Hammond who are investigating the coal industry, experts in industrial relations and a few far-seeing government officials are sounding the warning that another coal strike may fasten its paralyzing grip on this country next summer. That is not exactly pleasant news to the American people, but it gives them something to think about. The trouble is, the American people do not like to think about anything disagreeable until it actually happens.

A year ago, when the devastating strike that came last summer appeared inevitable, the public was warned.—It also was told of the strong possibility that there would be a railroad strike with disastrous consequences. The public refused to get excited over the prospect. Apparently there was a general idea that those who sound warnings of that kind are only croakers and "gloomers" who seek to take the joy out of life and that anyhow the way to deal with an unpleasant prospect is to ignore it and defer dealing with it until it becomes a reality.

Both strikes came as scheduled and the country paid and is still paying for them. Before they were over the public had become sufficiently excited, but the excitement consisted chiefly in venting indiscriminate and unreflected condemnation on the parties to the strikes and in criticizing government officials for not settling the controversies over night.

When the strikes were called off or temporarily adjusted—there were no permanent settlements—the public sighed with relief and seemingly forgot all about them.

Well informed observers believe that both strikes might have been averted had the public been sufficiently aroused and made it clear that there was an overwhelming popular sentiment that would not tolerate such industrial upheavals. Neither employers nor employees care to precipitate such crises when they know that the public mind is set against them. In the long run, they know, their welfare depends on the good will of the public, and they also know, if the public does not, that a thoroughly aroused and hostile public opinion is more efficacious than anti-strike laws.

Indifference or heedlessness on the part of the great mass of the people toward threatened industrial catastrophes is based apparently on the philosophy that "you can't cross a bridge until you come to it." That is a homely maxim that has been much used and much abused. It is just as safe a guide to thought and action as any other generalization, of which the wisest is, "No generalization is wholly true, not even this one."

It is a physical fact that we cannot cross a bridge until we get to it, but it is equally a fact that we can get ready to cross a bridge before we approach it. It is even possible in some cases to avoid crossing a bridge that is dangerous.

Those who are calling attention to the likelihood of another coal strike next spring and summer are endeavoring to arouse the public to the wisdom of getting ready to cross the bridge. They believe that if this can be done and a sufficiently impressive popular opinion is stirred up it may not be necessary to cross the bridge when the time comes.

That bridge spans the chasm between mine operators and mine workers. A strike is an exceedingly unsafe bridge. It should be condemned and a better way found over or around the chasm. In fact, it should be possible to compel the operators and miners to fill in and close up the chasm. It should not exist. It is a constant menace to the general public, and to the coal industry itself.

It is not important that it be determined which side dug the chasm or what upheaval created it. The operators may blame the miners for it and vice versa, but it is certain that it can not be blamed on the public or held to be "an act of Providence."

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST.
WHEN THE BABY CRIES.
There are mysteries profound
Bothering the sages,
Problems that have gone around
Since the early ages.
But one mystery remains,
Baffling all the wise:
Is it teeth or stomach pains
When the baby cries?

Men have learned some curious things
Since the world was started,
Solved the mystery of wings,
Stars are weighed and charted,
But no man can truly say
Where the trouble lies.
What it is that goes astray
When the baby cries.

Scientists may delve and probe
Of their laboratories,
They may strip the ancient globe
Of its hidden glories,
But they cannot answer this,
When the baby cries:
What it is that's gone amiss
When the baby cries.

Men may read the stars aright,
Science masters yearly
Problems once as dark as night,
Wisdom's light shines clearly,
But the gravest wisest brow
Ever this defies:
What it is she's wanting now
When the baby cries.

None has ever looked behind,
Deep thought he may be,
That swift mystery of the mind
Of a little baby;
None can say beyond a doubt
Why those fearful signs,
What the mother's all about
When the baby cries.

ON THE SPUR OF THE MOMENT

M. Clemenceau believes we have fallen short of our duty in respect to Europe. However, we are attending to our duty respecting ourselves, which, perhaps, is just as important.

Who's Who Today

FRIDTJOF NANSEN.
The Nobel peace prize which always accrues to statesmen of world renown was awarded in 1922 to Nansen, a famous Norwegian Arctic explorer and oceanographer, was born in Froen, near Christiania, Norway.

When he was 15, his family moved to Christiania, where he received his education. He entered the Christiania University in 1880.

When of age he voyaged to Greenland waters. On his return he wrote and published his notes of the trip and gained from his university the degree of doctor of philosophy. It was this trip that led him to the idea that Greenland was a promising field for exploration, and in 1887 he began preparations to cross the great ice fields of the Arctic.

His expedition was a small grant, but it was provided by a fellow townsman, Augustin Gammel.

Nansen started in 1888 and returned in 1889 after many hardships. In an expedition in 1890 to the parliament, king and a number of Christiania citizens were behind him. In June, 1893, he set sail for the Arctic. He was accompanied by a fellow explorer he started on the terrible journey on foot across the interior. The ordeal lasted from August 17, 1893 to May, 1894.

In 1895 Nansen entered politics and was influential in Norway's bloodless revolution. After the separation of Norway and Sweden he was appointed by the government of Norway as minister to England. He returned from that post in 1908 to accept the chair in oceanography in his alma mater. During the war he was appointed high commissioner of the League of Nations.

BEEF, IRON AND WINE

The doctor says my little girl is anemic, writes a mother, but he doesn't seem to help her. Would beef, iron and wine be all right to give her?

The mother spells it beef, iron and wine.
I should spell it bull, iron and wine, because I haven't so much respect for the stuff as the corresponding change of formulae the manufacturer is often constrained to make, owing to some annoying new law or a sudden shortage in the market supply of his chief ingredient, would render null and void in the faith of (in old testimonials which have outlived their authors in many cases.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

What causes scurvy fever? Is it from bad water? Can it be caused by taking children from a warm room to a cold room in school? Most of the cases in our neighborhood seem to be in public school children, and there are many who can take to sleep it away from our young ones? (Mrs. A. F. D.)

Answer: Scurvy fever is probably caused by a Streptococcus (a type of germ) spread in the excretions of the scales of infection and throat (discharges from nose and throat) (not from the scales side). The disease has often been spread in milk from infected or milked cows. Scurvy fever in a person handling the milk. Changing from warm to cold or from cold to warm, as of course has nothing to do with communicable disease. The only precaution I know of to keep children away from public places is to keep them away from public places, or to keep them away from public places, or to keep them away from public places.

PEOPLE OVER FORTY

People aged forty or over are less able to resist the attacks of colds, grippe, influenza or pneumonia than young people. Their vital force lacks the powerful resistance of youth.

Constituted bowels, sour stomach, indigestion, biliousness and weak kidneys all tend to lower the physical resistance. Millions of people now use Bulgarian Herb Tea to keep the bowels open and improve the blood. Bulgarian Herb Tea taken steaming hot will help break up a cold quickly. Physicians and druggists everywhere recommend it.
